“ I still miss you Trish. Thank you for being my favorite aunt and like another mom to me (with grandma and my mom). Some of my favorite memories were wrapping christmas presents with you on your bed on christmas eve night, the way you would wrap your arm around me when singing Joy to the World (also, you weren't a bad singer), how you always had me find miracle on 34th street for us to watch on grandma and papa bedroom tv while you got pecan rolls and a cola. My favorite movie still is the the Dark Knight when you took my sister and I during the FSU vs UF game time (you didn't want to be in the house with grandma watching the gators since she gets really anxious lol). I remember watching the paul pierce 40pt basketball game down in Miami with you in the NBA finals vs the Lakers. I remember going to costco in Miami and you telling me all about how much you love Coldplays album featuring viva la vida (i loved that song before you even told me about you liking it, but I took it as our song from that point forward.) I loved our nightly conversations after grandma and papa had gone to sleep and our very early morning conversations just before you went to sleep. Seeing you watching the show, "I am Jazz" made me acknowledge that it doesn't matter how a person identifies themselves and not really any of our business, that we should be accepting because they are a person and deserve to be treated fairly. You will always have a very special place in my heart Trishie. You knew me better than anyone. You taught me there is no point in hatred because it will just destroy you. I am sorry I didn't stick up for you when you were constantly attacked about the Paris incident. I know you accepted my apology (i apologized liked 5 times) when I got frustrated at you for canceling your 2 doctors appointments and bloodwork Jan after grandma had her kidney surgery. You just didn't want to deal with the "drama and attacking". Ironically, that is the same situation that certain people decided to twist what i said and tell everyone, "i hated you". It's funny in a sad way. My sister and I were the last people you ever had a conversation with at mayo. I was the very last conversation you ever had at mayo. I remember being allowed to sit outside exam/surgery rooms in the hallways in restricted areas because the staff knew how much i loved you. We did get to share an antibiotics resistant form of pneumonia one last time. (I should have worn ppe.) I'm sorry I missed your funeral because of the pneumonia, but I know you would forgive since you wouldn't want grandma, papa, or certain people recovering from cancer to get ill.

I do wish I had taken you to UF or mayo to begin with, but you wanted ORMC. I still remember papa and grandma looking at me when I told you "do you want me to call 911 or go to the doctors," when I got home for spring break. I remember the laugh you gave me and told me doctors. "You are only allowed to boss these troublemakers (pointing at grandma and papa) around, not me."

I love you so much. I talk about you all the time. I will keep your memory alive as long as I can. I listen to your voice recording at least once a month to hear your voice. You will always be my inspiration for being an accepting person.
