His primary area of practice was commercial law, and he was for many years corporate counsel for the nationwide Barnie's Coffee and Tea Company, which was founded by his high school friend and teammate, Phil "Barnie" Jones.

An athlete for most of his life, he particularly followed college basketball and attended many NCAA final four tournaments. For many years he was an avid golfer. He read voraciously, with an emphasis on history, biography, and politics.

A lively raconteur and keen and kind-hearted observer of the human condition, Ramsey was much beloved by friends, family, colleagues and clients, and his passing, as the poet Markham might have said, "leaves a lonely place against their skies."
