“ In a very dark moment of my life, I feared that people were after me, plotting my demise. At that moment, I ran to Bill's bedside, crying and fearing that they were after me. Bill awoke from his sleep, put his hand on my head, and whispered, "I won't let anybody hurt you. Everything's going to be ok."

That was the first time a father figure ever stood up to protect me. Be mindful that this man protecting me was bed bound.

I love you, Bill. I'll never forget what you mean to me.

“ I can't bare the pain... my heart is in distress. My beloved has closed his eyes, I can't see the light. Of his beautiful bright blue eyes... He's waisting away. With every breath he takes. I cannot accept. It's too much to take. It pains to see him this way... I cannot accept... He is going away... I wrote this for Bill in the early morning of Sunday, 7/05/2015 (rosie m.)

“ As you welcome a new day, you are shaken in disbelief by the high tides of life! Turmoil are thrown your way ,but you stand high and brave willing to engage and fight in spite of the stormy rampage, and violent winds in the pathway. you give it all you got : courage, faith and all...This too I shall face, I will no walk away. No matter how immense is the mountain ahead, no matter how deep is the valley at my feet. This battle is God's and ours to fight, even if the price is high, this battle I will fight even if I die!

This is what I wrote when Bill was diagnosed with cancer...

Rosie with love!

“ As I mourn and sorrow,my beloved's departure,I share the short lived but profound emotions of pathways lived through the journey,once traveled,leaving behind vivid memories worth traveled for. Although he's gone,the memories remained of the pride, courage and faith he once displayed. Bill was and still is a very special Angel,who inspired and touched many as he went through the pathways of life. I thank my Lord and Savior for allowing me to be by my beloved's side in his journey,he would be greatly missed by everyone that met him! Love you and see you again at the Gates of Heaven.
